Lastly, each team member assigned a score for need and another score for support for each building block. The scores were then totaled.

Commenting on the session, Hutcheson said, "The group gave serious consideration to each of the building blocks, weighing all the evidence from the community survey, the public forum, the data snapshot, and the other strategic plans that have been completed recently. In the end, they settled on placemaking as their next step."

Placemaking, or Primacy of Place, describes a community's strategic decision to dedicate resources to improving life experiences for residents, businesses, and visitors.

"It was a really close call between the leadership and placemaking building blocks; in fact, in ranking our options by need, we split the vote evenly," said Nathan P. Origer, executive director of the Pulaski County Community Development Commission.

Nathan P. Origer

"At the end of the day, we concluded that we would find greater community support for the placemaking block relative to the specific leadership-development programs available, as well as more opportunities for long-term success on that front."

After a brief hiatus, the HCI team will reconvene in early August with Sharon Canaday, associate director of economic and community development for Ball State University's Building Better Communities. Canaday will guide the team as it takes stock of physical assets; explores the integration of the arts, culture and historic preservation into built assets; or focuses on enhancing Pulaski County's local food system.

Ultimately, each community selected for HCI will participate in a capstone block. During this block, the HCI team will learn ways to keep the team energized and working on longer-term goals. The team will also plan a shorter-term Pathfinder Project, with financial assistance from The Office of Community and Rural Affairs, which will place Pulaski County on the path toward achieving its goals. It is estimated that by being selected for HCI, Pulaski County will have gained the equivalent of nearly $100,000 in training and technical assistance from state-agency and university professionals.

The Hometown Collaboration Initiative is sponsored by the Indiana Office of Community and Rural Affairs and The Office of the Lieutenant Governor, in partnership with the Purdue Center for Regional Development and Ball State University's Building Better Communities Department.

Haley has best finish of the year

JJ Haley gets ready to take the green flag in the NASCAR Hall of Fame 150 at Bowman Gray Stadium this past Saturday night. Known as the "The Madhouse," Bowman Gray Stadium is a quarter mile flat track located in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, and was the host to the NASCAR Hall of Fame 150. JJ would finish the final practice session in position six, and qualify outside the pole in position two. Haley piloted the Braun Auto Group/Braun Abilities Chevy to a third-place finish behind teammates Scott Heckert in first and Dalton Sargeant in second.

2015 Summer Reading Program for all ages

Readers of all ages have the opportunity to participate in the annual summer reading program at the Pulaski County Public Library.

This year's theme explores the world of superheroes! The program starts on June 1 and finishes at the beginning of August. Registration is free and ongoing throughout the program. Those who sign up for the summer reading will get points for checking out and returning books and other items. Kids and teens receive prizes at certain point levels, while adults get to enter prize drawings at the end of the summer.

From Superhero Training to Tunnels Tuesdays, the library has all sorts of fun programs planned. Check out the library newsletter, see the events page on the library website, or pick up a special kids and teens calendar at the children's desk to see what's happening on a particular date. No matter what day a person visits the library, something fun is sure to be going on!

To learn more about summer reading, give the librarians a call, or better yet, come on in and sign up! They are looking forward to getting heroic with readers this summer!
