HERE'S WHAT YOU MISSED IN THIS WEEK'S PULASKI COUNTY JOURNAL

Diseases common in blue spruce

Submitted by Phil Woolery, Starke/Pulaski Extension Agriculture and Natural Resources Educator

The Colorado blue spruce is a widely planted ornamental tree. The pyramidal form and its blueish color are the primary reasons for its popularity. It is native to the Rocky Mountains in Colorado and surrounding states. Although most of the planted blue spruce will have the blue color, few trees exhibit it in wild populations. The ornamental trees are grafted from trees with the blue trait, or grown from seeds of populations where the blue color is more common. The seedlings typically do not have the blue needles initially, but it increases as it matures.

This common tree is having problems in our area. You might have noticed that the needles are falling off the lower branches of many trees. This will slowly move up the tree with the lower branches dying. One or two diseases, rhizospaera and stigmina, are the cause of this problem. The fungus infects new growth in the spring, but it often takes up to 12 months for the symptoms to be visible. The following spring these infected needles will produce fruiting bodies that will then infect the new growth of that year. Through the summer and fall, the old needles will turn brown or purple and fall off. The fungal fruiting bodies can be seen with a magnifying glass as black dots on the needles. A healthy spruce will keep their needles for around five years, but trees infected with these diseases will only have one year of needles. The disease often starts at the bottom of the tree where it tends to remain wet longer.

To control this disease, you can cut off lower infected branches back to the main trunk to remove some of the infection potential. Fungicides can be applied in the spring as the new growth is emerging to protect this new growth. These treatments would be needed for at least two years. The fungicides act only to protect the new growth from infection. They will not cure the needles that are already infected. Small trees can often be treated by a homeowner, but larger trees may require treatment by a professional.

If the infection is too severe, (at least 50 percent of the crown is dead) then it is time to consider removal of the tree and replacement. Norway spruce and concolor fir offer similar features and are resistant to these diseases.

For more information on these diseases and treatments, contact Phil Woolery at the Purdue Extension Office at 574-946-3412 or pwoolery@purdue.edu.

Woolery is a certified arborist and would be happy to answer any of your tree questions.

Monterey looks at beautification

Amber L. Tomlinson

Kelli Denton, who was presenting the Main Street organization that has established in Monterey, approached the town council with a few ideas the group is pondering.

At a regular meeting on April 11, Kelli said the group is not large enough to become a recognized nonprofit Main Street organization but they are working to better the community under the umbrella of the Monterey Community Foundation.

“We brainstormed a couple of ideas that we would like to do for the community,” Kelli said. “Doing the things that we are doing, we are just doing small-scale.”

Kelli said the group is looking to rent a sign that would advertise the Monterey businesses and Monterey Days. The cost will be about $200.

The group would also like to purchase brackets to place on the town square light posts. The brackets would hold flowers during the spring and summer. The cost of the six to eight brackets hasn’t been determined yet.

Kelli said volunteers will maintain the flowers during the season.

She is hoping between the service organizations and businesses that the funds can be raised for the projects.

No funding would come from the town at this time. Her request to place brackets and hang flowers on the town light posts was approved.

In other business:

- Minutes from the March 14 meeting were approved.
- A recommendation was made that the town approve a substantial completion order for the contractors who are completing the sewer plant upgrade project. It appears the project is almost complete other than items on a punch list. There may be further work completed on the project in regards to skimming the scum. A motion was approved to sign off on the substantial completion order.

- Laura Bailey, vice president of the Pulaski County Election Board, approached the council about election expenses and how the town could save money. Bailey said if a municipality does not participate in a general election year, there could be a cost of $7,000 or more to the town. Bailey said the current elected official terms cannot be changed but a resolution can be passed to change the election dates. She used the example of Winamac that approved a resolution for the elected officials to serve a one-year term limit and then elected the town board during a general election year. She said after adjusting the terms, the town would need to approve a resolution that it is participating in the general elections. The council took it under advisement.
- Community Foundation of Pulaski County Executive Director Wendy Rose approached the town council with good news. Rose said the foundation is offering Love Your Community 2017 Placemaking Grants to the communities in Pulaski County. The foundation is celebrating 20 years of giving and the grants are part of that celebration. The town can apply for a grant up to $10,000. “These projects should address the needs of the community and have the potential for making a positive impact in your town,” Rose said. As part of the grant the community foundation board would like to see the project be maintained. After the presentation by Rose, the council discussed some of the ways the money could be used such as upgrading the park playground equipment.
- A request was made to close the streets for Monterey Days. The request was approved.
- A motion was approved for the Monterey Volunteer Fire Department to use the town parking lot for a fundraiser.

In order to avoid misunderstandings, some advertisers do not offer "employment" but rather supply the readers with manuals, directories and other materials designed to help their clients establish mail order selling and other businesses at home. Under NO circumstance should you send any money in advance or give the client your checking, license ID, or credit card numbers. Also beware of ads that claim to guarantee loans regardless of credit and note that if a credit repair company does business only over the phone it's illegal to request any money before delivering its service. All funds are based in US dollars. 800 numbers may or may not reach Canada. ADVERTISE to 10 Million Homes across the USA!
